PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

Incidents and Yawning. The proverbial small boy has created trouble for one young man, not yet twenty, who frequently calls on his sister. The small boy was anxious to employ some of his idle hours during vacation by doing some work, for which he should receive remuneration, and so one morning he made application to a prominent insurance agent to do collecting. The agent asked him all sorts of questions relative and not relative to the business, and finally said: "Now, if you should do collecting for me, how would I know that you would make the returns honestly? You would have to have some security before I could let you do it." "You know M. J., don't you?" referring to the young man; "well, he calls on my sister Annie, and he'll go on my bond for any amount." The agent has told the story on the young man, and all one has to ask him now is, if he continues calling on "My sister Annie." m "My sister Annie."

The formal card of invitation which is sent out to-day does not in the least resemble he one which our grandparents received in the early part of this century. An invitation dated Jan. 1, 1810, is in the possession of a gentleman of this city, and it is a valuable surjosity. The card is an ace of clubs, the tize and form similar to those which we use sow, and presumably was used on account of the scarcity of paper in the country. On the back, which was plain white, but is now browned back, which was plain white, but is now browned by age, is the invitation, written in the peculiar thirography of seventy years ago. Beginning tlose up in the left hand corner, it reads: "The sompany of Revd. Price is respectfully solicited at party at Mr. Hunyman's on Friday. 5th last," and is signed M. C. Sprigg, W. M. Worthington. In the lower left corner is "Romney, Jany. 1, 1810," and en the right edge, vertically, "Managers."

There are so few places here that have any name except that it is the home of whoever may be living therein that when the property of Mr. D. P. Erwin was sold to Mr. Stewart under the name of Elm Nest it provoked considerable talk, and the question was asked as to how it received its name. Numerous passers looked sharply for a nest of elms, but only one could be found. It seems that the name was given to it some years ago, and with a view to the eternal fitness of things a number of elm trees were bought and were to have been transplanted there, but never were. Riders in the northeast part of the city may find elms with a trench dug around them. These are the trees that properly belong to "Elm Nest."

There has been something in the atmosphere during the past week conducive to yawning. An that your final exit was to be made instantly and strait down some one's throat. The ordinary yawner is not one who hides his distended jaws in a handkerchief, or covers them with his hand; he is not ashamed to yawn. neither is he cultivated enough to conceal it. For want of a word which shall mean both masculine and feminine person the pronoun "he" is used, but the yawning is not confined to the "hes." Women make as great a display as the men. The variety of yawns is as great as those who commit the act. There is the one who opens his mouth so wide, that mouth is all that is visible. Then one, who shuts his teeth closely and a swellen appearance of the throat betrays that he tried to swallow it. The one who closes his jaws with a snap like a turtle, the modest little yawn which is made to assume a deep breath. The time also varies. One man was seen whose one yawn continued while he walked nearly half a block, while another had scarcely opened his mouth until it was closed again. Malaria is in season, and a slight touch of that may be the cause of the epidemic, but, whatever it is, it is to be hoped that it has reached its worst, and following weeks may not be so sadly spent in seeing such dread sights.

They were treated royally, and the people here will be apt to reciprocate their generous hospitality before many months have passed. months have passed.

Notes About Women. Buffalo, N. Y., has a Women's Wheel Club.

Miss Harrist E. Cushman has been appointed pro-fessor of Greek at Fargo College, D. T. Mrs. Raymond (Anna Louise Cary) has given $250 for a free bed in the Maine State General Hospital. The Misses Drexel, of Philadelphia, have just opened an orphans' home, with grounds of 250 acres. Frances H. Mitchell of Philadelphia, has received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, at the University

The Ladies' Library and Educational Association, of Topeks, have commenced writing the biography of One of the girls' tricycles at Cuba, N. Y., bears the following legend painted in clear letters: "Harrison depends on his own reputation, not that of his wife."

The first woman to receive a degree for legal attainments in English-speaking lands was a Western woman, and the first university to confer such a degree a Western university—that of Michigan. An old ladies' home has been opened in Richmond, Ind., through a legacy left for that purpose by Margaret Smith, and a society of women has been formed to aid the home and to place it on a permanent basis. Miss Anna Randall Diehl, the gifted elecutionist and teacher, has published an extensive correction of Noah Webster, in the shape of a dictionary of 2,000 good English words which Webster and his successors have ovelooked.

Miss Elizabeth Story, a young San Francisco girl studying art in Paris, promises to become to dogs what Rcsa Bonheur is to horses—their most faithful delineator. Her last salon picture, "Les Orphe-lines," has been sent to Chicago.

Atice Hope Robinson, an eleven-year-old girl at Foxcroft, Me., has been field-overseer, this year, of the picking of over twenty-five bushels of strawberries, having had on some days as many as twenty little boys and girls under her charge. Two Buffalo girls have bought out one of the oldest drug stores on Main street and have taken possession. Both are qualified by long and highly responsible business training to make a success of the enterprise.

and they have taken the course in pharmacy at the medical college. Miss Ida Van Etten has founded and organized a Working Women's society in New York, the object of which is to keep up the standard of women's wages, to protect women and children employed in shops, and to look after the interest of women-workers generally. The membership fees are twenty-five cents a month, and out of the fund accumulated by the fees $5 a week are paid to those too ill to work. Dr. Grace Walcott and three other American wom-en physicians had lately the distinguished honor of an invitation by Professor Bilroth, of Vienna, to at-tend his private clinic four times and witness his own operations. The next day he took them to his private museum, where they saw some of the results of his surgical triumphs. Prof. Bilroth is at the head of continental surgeons, and a few years ago led the opposition to the admission of women to the medical schools. The fact that these American women doctors were invited by Dr. Bilroth to his own clinic and to his private museum created quite a sensation in Vienna and was quoted in all the papers. But the fact shows the growth of public sentiment.

MR. CLEVELAND'S ACCEPTANCE. Semi-Official Statement as to the Tenor of the Coming Document. Washington Special to Louisville Courier-Journal.

The President's letter accepting the nomination of the St. Louis convention, which has been completed some time, will be made public! in a few days, perhaps as early as Sunday. The let-ter, like all of Mr. Cleveland's public documents, is plain, direct and vigorous in dealing with public questions of interest to the people. Those who have been predicting that the President would take a backward step on his tariff message last December will find themselves mistaken, for the letter will show that he has not receded one jot from the strong, statesmanlike views there presented in favor of tariff reform. The only change will be in the phraseology, which will be quite clearly enough expressed in good Anglo-Saxon to be fully understood by all classes of the people. Like his message last winter, his letter of acceptance will be devoted mainly, if not entirely, to the great question of the tariff. He talks straight from the shoulder in regard to the iniquities and enormities of the present war tariff which has piled up in the treasury millions of dollars taken from the pockets of the people and the channels of trade to the great danger of the financial security and stability of the government. He refers to the wise and prudent action of the Democratic House of Representatives in dealing conservatively with the tariff issue, and passing a measure revising and reducing high tariff duties without in any way disturbing the manufacturing interests and the wages of the laboring classes. In a word, President Cleveland treats the tariff question in the good old Democratic way that the masses of the party would have him. At the same time in doing this he does not forget the rights of the workmen of America, and believes that the Democratic policy is now and has always been friendly to the poor man and friendly to the The President also sustains the civil service policy of his administration, and reaffirms his conscientious belief that "a public office is a public trust," and that honesty and capacity should be the foremest recommendation for a governmental official.

LAST SHOT AT APPOMATTOX. A Little Pight that Took Place After the White Fing Was Hoisted. From a Posthumous Article of General Sheridan, in the September North American Review. Beyond us, in a low valley (near Appomattox Court-house, after my flank movement) lay Lee and the remnant of his army. There did not appear to be much organization, except in the appear to be much organization, except in the advanced troops under General Gordon, whom we had been fighting, and a rear-guard under General Longstreet, still further up the valley. Formations were immediately begun, to make a bold and sweeping charge down the grassy slope, when an aid-de-camp from Custer, filled with excitement, hat in hand, dashed up to me with the message from his chief. "Lee has surrendered! Do not charge; the white flag is up!"

but not to charge. Looking to the left, to Appomattox Courthouse, a large group was seen near by the lines of confederate troops that had fallen back to that point. General Custer had not come back, and, supposing that he was with the group at the court-house, I moved on a gallop down the narrow ridge, followed by my staff. The court-house was, perhaps, three-fourths of a mile distant. We had not gone far before a heavy fire was opened on us from a skirt of timber to our right, and distant not much over 300 yards. I halted for a moment, and taking off my hat, called out that the flag was being violated, but could not stop the firing, which now caused us all to take shelter in a ravine running parallel to the ridge we were on, and down which we then traveled. As we approached the courthouse, a gentle ascent had to be made. was in advance, followed by a sergeant carrying my battle-flag. Within one hundred to one hundred and fifty yards from the courthouse and confederate lines, some of the men in their ranks brought down their guns to an aim on us, and great efforts was made by their officers to keep them from firing. I halted, and hearing some noise behind, turned in the raddle. and saw a confederate soldier attempting to take my battle-flag from the color-bearer. This the sergeant bad no idea of submitting to, and had drawn his saber to cut the man down. A word from me caused him to return his saber, and take the flag back to the staff officers, who were some little distance behind. I remained stationary a moment after these events, then calling to a staff officer, directed him to go over to the group of confederate officers, and demand what such conduct meant. Kind apologies were made, and we advanced. The enperior officers met were Gen. J. B. Gordon and Gen. Cadmus M. Wilcox, the latter an old army officer. As soon as the first greeting was over, a furious firing began in front of our own eavalry from whom we had only a few minutes before separated. General Gordon seemed to be somewhat disconcerted by it. I remarked to him, "Gen. Gordon, your men fired on me as I was coming over here, and undoubtedly they have done the same to Merritt's and Custer's commands. We might just as well let them fight it out." To this proposition General Gordon did not accede. I then asked. "Why not send a staff officer and have your people cease firing? They are violating the flag!" He said, "I have no staff officer to send." I replied, "I will let you have one of mine;" and sailing for Lieutenant Vanderbilt Allen, he was directed to report to General Gordon and carry his orders. The orders were to go to General Geary, who was in command of a small brigade of South Carolina cavalry, and ask him to discontinue the firing. Lieutenant Allen dashed off with the message, but on delivering it to General Geary, was taken prisoner, with the remark from that officer that he did not care for white flags, that South Carolinians nevel surren-

It was about this time that Merritt, getting impatient at the supposed treacherous firing, ordered a charge of a portion of his command. While Generals Gordon and Wilcox were engaged in conversation with me, a cloud of dust, a wild burrab, a flashing of sabers, indicated a charge, and the ejaculations of my staff officers were heard, 'Look! Merritt has ordered a charge!" The flight of Geary's brigade followed; Lieutenant Alien was thus released. The last gun had been fired, and the last charge made in the Virginia campaign.

A New Song of the Bucket. How fresh in my mind are the scenes of my chile As fond recollections present them to view—
The cow stall, the pig pen, the ten cords of drewood,
All the tough chores that I had to go through; The weeds in the garden, the stones in the stubble, The errands to run and the white beans to shell:

And (when I'd already a suplus of trouble).

The bucket that viciously dropped in the well—
The rotten-roped bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The confounded bucket that dropped in the well. After trudging all day in the wake of a harrow, The team I must water ere getting my grub: Cross, foot-sore and tired clear into the marrow,

I'd seize on the windlass to fill up the tub.
So downward that bucket demurely meandered,
And then with hard lugging it "rose from the well."
But ere I could dump it the rope had disbanded,
And spang to the bottom the 'tarnal thing fell! Then with grapples and "creepers" and like bother-

I bent o'er the well like a capital A. And mingling my tears with devout invocations
I sprinkled them down as I angled away.
How it caught—and slipped off—and at last caugh

I pulled with a joy that my words cannot tell; And I hugged, not from love, but to hold it me surely.

The mud-covered bucket that rose from the well. The slippery old bucket, the rotten-roped bucket, The mud-covered bucket that rose from the well. -Detroit Free Press.

The Art of Posing. Another summer craze that has taken so well that it promises to be transferred to the winter drawing-room is that of "posing." Both the nitra-fashionable men and women pose, distinctively. The men favor the Apollo attitude. reclining against massive pillars, or bend, engrossed, over the last story by the "Duchess" with all the anxisty of expression, and seeming depth of attention they would give to a business problem of importance. It is the women, however, who pose the most effectively. They go into it with more careful thought as to detail, and be it the mere fact of reclining in a chair, the shape of the same, and the hue of the covering, is no less studied than the attitude. Striking picturesque poses through window casements adding materially to the effect, is actredited to that most romantic of modern story writers, Amelie Rives, who has a fancy for atendinizing in full-length casements whenever opportunity offers, and not a few visitors to the novelist's Virginian home have carried away vivid impressions of her as she waved them adieu, standing in the frame of one of the windows opening off the wide porch, clad in some soft diaphanous fabric, her white, rounded arms extending forth dramatically.
